What Should a Job Be Like?

Due to the rise in the competition for jobs, many people change their thoughts about what they are looking for in a job. It has changed the viewpoint of many individuals who want a job. According to the demands of graduates, job types can be considered in two parts: one is a desired job, and the second is a satisfying job.

Most job seekers usually have a dream of a desired job. A desired job is determined by people based on their interests. Usually, a high pay rate is considered desirable. This is the first thing that graduates look for before getting hired. Everyone wants a high salary to build their life, such as buying a good house, and having a wonderful car. Another thing that people include in their dream job is having a respected position. For instance, as a student with engineering background, I have seen many graduates in this field want a respected position in the top industries like Apple, Google, and Tesla. They think that they can achieve a position of a data scientist, a web developer or a cyber security expert. Planning from the beginning is a good way to achieve what you want in a job.

Because so many graduates do not get a desired job, they have to look for a professionally satisfying job. The main motive to get a satisfying job is job security. Job security means a secure job that does not let individuals to worry about their job. For instance, if employees have an unsecure job, then they will always have the fear of being fired from this job. In contrast, in secure jobs, individuals are not fired easily. A second thing that people look for in a satisfying job is a salary along with pension which can fulfill their needs. However, this salary cannot make people capable to live a luxury life because this job will only provide them a decent life style. In addition, a satisfying job is easy to manage because it balances the work, and life together. Employees and employers do not often work overtime; they get more time for their family. A satisfying job is a perfect job if people can manage their whole life in what they get from their job.

In conclusion, fulfilling occupation, and a fine job are two main aspects that job seekers want in job. Although it seems difficult to get both types of jobs today due to unemployment issues, it does not mean that you can not get it. Just do your best, and try as long as you can.
